BARNABAS CAMPAU
and His Descendants.

The following pages contain a statement of the family and descendants of Barnabas Campau, an old-time prominent citizen, wealthy trader and land owner of our city.

The material here gathered is nearly all from official and church records.

There are, doubtless, many errors in the compilation but, as it is only printed for circulation among members of the family, it is hoped that the errors will be corrected or overlooked.

The Campau Family In Detroit.

The first member of this family mentioned in the Detroit records is Michel Campau, who was born in 1667 and came to Detroit in 1707. He remained with his family for some time, but eventually returned alone to Montreal, where he died in 1737. His widow, Jeanne Masse, died in Detroit in 1764.

Jacques Campau, a brother of Michel Campau, was born in Montreal in 1677; married Cecile Catin in 1699, and came to Detroit with his family in 1708. He obtained a grant of what is now known as the Meldrum farm, from the French government, in 1734. He died 14th May, 1751.

The following are his children:

1. Jean Louis Campau, born 26 August, 1702, married 7 January, 1724, Marie Louise Robert. He died March 15, 1774.

BARNABAS CAMPAU.

From this place, we will continue the examination for the family of Barnabas Campau only. He was five or six years of age when his mother died. In after years he complained that he had a hard time with his stepmother, but this may be only the notion that every boy gets that his stepmother is not as kind and attentive as his own mother would have been. She had two sons of her own, sons of Captain George McDougall, who had died at Carleton Island in 1780. Captain McDougall, in pleading that provision be made by the British government for his wife, said that she was frail and delicate. She certainly came from a good family. Her father, Robert Navarre, was the Royal Notary for this district, and it is very probable that Barnabas was raised with all the care that other children had at his time. He was fairly well educated, much better, in fact, than most boys of that time. His father died when he was fourteen, and much of his early after life was spent with his brother, Joseph, who was fourteen years older than he was and who was then, and ever after, during a long life, an eminently successful business man. Barnabas must have thought considerable of his stepmother's family, for his second wife, Archange, was the grand-daughter of his stepmother. General Friend Palmer, in his "Early Days in Detroit," says: "Barnabas (L'Abbie) Campau was a fine specimen of the French gentleman, of commanding presence."

Barnabas lived, in 1837, on the south side of Jefferson Avenue, west of Randolph Street. He is described as being tall and portly, dignified and polite, weighing about 200 pounds. He was a merchant and fur trader. He had accumulated a fortune. In 1817, he bought the Island Park and left it as a rich legacy to his children. He also owned the McDougall farm, excepting one-ninth, which his wife had inherited from her father. He also owned a large tract of very valuable land called the Gore, lying between the Ten Thousand Acre Tract and the rear end of the farms fronting on the river. This property lies on both sides of Woodward Avenue, south of the Boulevard, and is now traversed by the various railroads, Michigan Central, Bay City, Grand Trunk and Lake Shore. He was also the owner of the land on which the Ford Building now stands and many other valuable tracts in Detroit and in other places in Michigan.

Barnabas Campau (20) was born 27 June, 1775, and died 8 October, 1845. He was married twice, as follows:

23. (1) Therese Cicot was born 10 February, 1780, and died 20 August, 1817. She was the daughter of Jean Baptiste Cicot and his wife, Angelique Poupard. Through this marriage, Campau became interested in private claim 114 in Ecorse, and private claim 726, Detroit City, now called the Peter Godfroy farm.

24. (2) Archange McDougall, daughter of John Robert McDougall and his wife, Archange Campau. She was born 8 September, 1794, and died 31 October, 1829. (In the church records she is several times called Cecile McDougall.) Through this marriage, Campau became interested in the McDougall farm, private claims 11 and 453, now called the McDougall farm. Of the four children who survived their father, two (Emilie and Angelique) were by the first wife.

The children of Barnabas Campau were as follows:

25. (1) Angelique Campau, born 17 November, 1809, and died 19 December, 1872. She married John B. Piquette 16 September, 1834. He was born 29 September, 1809, and died 24 August, 1851. John B. Piquette was half-brother to Alexandrine M. (Sheldon) (Campau) Willis.

The children of the second marriage, who survived Barnabas Campau, were:

28. (2) Alexander Macomb Campau, born 13 September, 1823, died 1 April, 1908. He married Eliza S. Throop, 15 April, 1846. She was born in Auburn, New York, in 1828, the daughter of George B. Throop, brother of Enos T. Throop. She died 12 April, 1905. Alexander was one of the first students in the University of Michigan.
